

Get the best from your digital SLR with a powerful ProMaster Electronic Flash

Don't count on the built-in flash in your camera.

When you use a ProMaster Electronic Flash with your digital SLR you'll get:

Better Color

The built-in flash can only supply a small amount of light. In order to get vibrant accurate colors you need a flash capable of supplying a larger amount of quality color correct light to overcome the effects of incandescent and fluorescent lighting.

Sharper Pictures

Digital SLR cameras are capable of taking pictures in very low light levels. The lower power built-in flash causes your camera to increase the sensitivity of the imaging sensor and you end up with digital "noise" in your photos and a reduction in apparent sharpness. By using a high power flash, your imaging sensor can operate in the optimal range reducing the noise and making spectacular sharp images.

Longer Range

Most built-in flash units don't have the power to produce good images much beyond 15-20 feet which limits the pictures you can take at sporting events, in auditoriums or churches, or any situation where you need good light at a distance.

Eliminate Red Eye

The built-in flash on your digital SLR is prone to producing photos of people and pets with "red-eye" effect. This is mostly caused by the flash being too close to the camera lens. A ProMaster accessory electronic flash moves the primary light source up and away from the lens to help eliminate red-eye.

More Creative Control

With features like bounce, fill and remote operation, you can produce better, more professional looking photographs. The ability to see your images right away from your digital SLR will let you experiment to get exactly the effect you want.
